

Reciprocal Style-C

The Anatomy

In the anatomy of the Reciprocal Style, the role of the teacher (T) is to make all subject matter, criteria, and logistical decisions and to provide feedback to the observer. The learner's (L) role is to work in partnership relationships. One learner is the doer who performs the task, making the nine decisions of the Practice Style, while the other learner is the observer who offers immediate and on-going feedback to the doer, using a criteria sheet designed by the teacher. At the end of the first practice, the doer and the observer switch roles—hence the name for this landmark behavior—The Reciprocal Style.

* The arrow represents the decision shift from the Practice Style-B to the Reciprocal Style-C.